BUY AT HOME

The question of advisability of sending money away from home has been threshed from pillar to post for past years.

I ask you to be true to yourself, your family, and neighbor in answering these questions.

Did it ever appear to you that these big houses buy refuse goods from large factories? Goods which would be rejected by your home merchant, in whom you put your trust and who pays highest market prices for your produce.

When you want a pair of boots you want to see them. Does the big house extend this privilege? No; you look at a picture and pay in advance, and as a rule get inferior goods, if you do what you are going to do? Whip your wife or abuse your home merchant?

Don't expect diamonds as big as walnuts for twenty cents a bushel. You won't get them but you will get quality and accommodation from your home merchant.

When you have a failure of crops, sickness or otherwise need help, to whom do you go? To the big house miles away? No! It would get you nothing. You go to your home merchant. He always helps you.

Who buys your produce? The mail order house? No! Your home merchant.

If you had to depend on a mail order house to buy your eggs, you would be obliged to eat so many yourself that you would be ashamed to look a hen in the face.

John and wife came to my store one night, wanted wall paper for five rooms picked out samples, had me figure how many bolts would be necessary. Also requested sample for each room. Would call tomorrow. They ordered from a mail order house using my samples and figures for number of bolts needed. They got it in about two weeks. Each bolt was short in length therefore another order by express was necessary to complete the rooms.

When John found out that I knew about it he naturally laid the blame on his wife.

Think it over, ask yourself if it's right. Your home merchant is your true friend in prosperity and adversity who always has a willing hand on your back to support you, but rest assured he won't have the other in your pocket.

Stay with the horse that takes you safely across the bridge.

The Buy At Home Spirit

It many times befalls the attention of merchants in any community that some few people labor under the impression that he, the merchant, is constantly addicted to exorbitant prices.

They do not stop to consider that the more trading at home, the more stores, more keen the competition and the less chance of padded prices.

Hence such people send away for their necessities, apparel and sundries and mail order houses in the larger cities are then enabled to declare 20% and 30% dividends on their capital stock.

To the consumer this course of purchase entails buying merchandise you have never seen, paying for it (together with postage and cost of money order) two or three weeks before you receive it, cost of drayage to your home on arrival and a minimized chance of recourse against the shipper should your goods prove unsatisfactory.

Another important fact exists, with reference to groceries, that mail order houses rarely quote or deliver standard brands or trade-marked goods. Reliable manufacturers, as a whole, refuse any trading with them. As a result, off brands of merchandise of questionable quality are offered at presumably reduced prices, and you are the victim.

The merchants of this district are in position and do quote honest goods at honest prices. They buy in quantities standard brands of well-known quality and can compete in fairness with any mail order house.

My data of the actual monetary comparison between local and mail order house figures is readily available, that on account of space, cannot be detailed here, and these figures show positively there is no advantage in foreign trading.

But let it be more strongly brought out at this juncture that the merchant of this district needs your business to support your neighbors, his clerks, and to stand the brunt of community progress and taxation.

It means the confinement in our own channels of trade, money for merchant, baker, business man, farmer and consumer. It cultivates a better business tone in trading and results in mutual prosperity throughout the locality.

Therefore, before listening to the solicitations of mail order house salesmen or the flattering cuts of merchandise in their catalogues, good-heartedness, good judgement and discretion will be exercised in obtaining quotations from your own local merchant who stands near at hand to rectify misunderstanding and with but the one idea, of catering to your requirements.

Look well toward the "Stay at Home Dollar."
